Description

The Golden Archerfish (Toxotes blythii) is a fascinating brackish-water predator known for its incredible ability to shoot jets of water to knock down prey from above the surface. Native to Southeast Asia, particularly Borneo and surrounding river systems, this species thrives in estuaries and mangrove swamps.

Their diet consists of insects, small crustaceans, worms, and floating pellets. Offer a variety of protein-rich foods like bloodworms, crickets, or even live prey to encourage natural hunting behavior.
